The Connecticut Commission on Children and the After School Network are joining thousands of communities across the country in the national Lights on After School Celebration. After school is a critical public policy issue for children and families. At the After School Summit on June 4, 2004 more than 300 participants agreed that after school programming is essential to the future success of Connecticut's youth.

Keep the momentum going—join in the celebration at the statewide event in Hartford, October 13. Then bring the celebration to your own community on October 14.
